The new park-like extension of the St. Bonifatius Hospital is a welcoming and relaxing atmosphere for patients and visitors. Two major design issues were essential in achieving this: the spatial improvement of the entrance and reception area and the integration of these areas into the overall context of the city of Lingen.

Paths of water and high plants serve as an engaging visual element and reference point throughout the grounds. The access to the underground parking garage is clearly defined and the green park extends past it towards the city. The city has achieved its multiple aims of interweaving the hospital outdoor area with the grid of the city and defining "beautiful usefulness".
