In this master plan, we wanted to retain the essential features of a classic "campus island" while taking into consideration the requirements of a modern university and integrating the campus to the topography and landscape of the region.

A vibrant space for the students, scientists, and visitors of the Philipps University had to be developed. In our view, the campus in Lahnberge needs a "supporting structure" – in other words, a way to bond the whole area together through a public space with social potential and buildings used by students of all disciplines.
