The forecourt of the Haus der Jugend from the 1950s is being renovated and redesigned. Walls and railings will be renovated in keeping with the listed building and surfaces will be covered with color-coordinated natural stone. The square will be paved with beige polygon-shaped concrete slabs with a red accent in the middle, defining a stage for performances and events. The central element is also a concrete noise barrier that serves as seating. An awning provides shade. The existing trees will be retained and planted with lavender. An island of almond trees will be planted near the road.
